

< All help topics

Tracking

How can I request to redirect a package to a FedEx location?

How can I track my package with map view?

How can I track the exact location of my package?

How do I know what time my FedEx® package will arrive?

If I missed a delivery, how do I know when you'll reattempt to deliver my package?

What do I do if I received a delivery notification, but can't find my package?

What do I do if I don't have a tracking number?

What do I do if I missed my delivery?

What does the "delivery exception" status mean?

What does the "delivery now pending" status mean?

What does the "delivery now pending" status mean?

What do I do if I received a delivery notification, but can't find my package?

When will my package arrive?

Why isn't my package moving when I check tracking?

Why isn't my package moving when I check tracking?

Packages are scanned at various points between pickup and delivery. The frequency of scans varies, and it's not unusual for a shipment to go more than 24 hours without an update while it's on its way to the final destination. This is especially true during periods of long travel. It can appear that your package isn't moving, but it's actually in transit to the next location where it will be scanned and/or delivered.

Related topics

Delivery

